Malcolm will explore how Christian leaders might respond to these dual challenges and show sustainable leadership in uncertain and unstable times.
Recalibrating what it means to serve God – how can I do it in my business?	Paul Chandler	Paul is non-executive director of the Co-op Group, and was formerly CEO of Traidcraft and of SPCK, the publisher / mission agency. Only her faith and circle of intimates has allowed her to find a place of slow healing and restoration where she can seek to experience the Father anew and rediscover his love.	Whatever your loss, you will get chance to hear a little of Faye's story and what has helped her on the journey. And- if you wish- share a little of yours, so together we may find ways to live well amidst sadness and loss.

There will be plenty of time to ask questions and share experiences.

Finding your work in your purpose	Anna & Wills Crump	Anna and Wills work in law and finance respectively in Leeds. Both are passionate about seeing God’s Kingdom growing in business through Christians working in influential roles and exemplifying Kingdom values. They run a networking group for Christians in business and professional services.	An implicit assumption is that our work fundamentally serves little kingdom purpose. We don’t agree with this premise. In this workshop, we will facilitate delegates to explore their kingdom purpose and will help attendees consider how God is already using their work for His kingdom and how they can partner with Him in the future.
The Impact of Christian Workplace Groups on Business	Ann Cheung	Ann is an Ambassador for Transform Work UK. She is the Lead Coach at getsoaring Limited and has a heart to encourage, equip and enable Christians to live-out their calling and grow the Kingdom of God. She is a chartered civil engineer.	Bringing the Culture of Heaven into your organisation through connecting, supporting and equipping Christians – together we can achieve more!
